

InvestorCoffee (09.10.2024) : Gold Prices Edge Higher on Renewed Risk Aversion

written by Tracy Hughes | September 10, 2024

Canada Market Highlights

Canadian futures are dipping in pre-market as oil prices pull back. This comes as Northvolt announced a slower-than-expected pace for its C$7 billion battery plant project in Canada, revising spending plans and considering potential job cuts. Power Nickel Inc. (TSXV: PNPB | OTCQB: PNPBF) is delivering solid results from its summer drilling program at the Lion Zone discovery, reporting sulfide mineralization in 10 out of 12 holes. CEO Terry Lynch highlighted their success in expanding the Lion Zone, particularly westward, and a new interpretation of its footprint could positively impact future drilling costs. The company is preparing for a robust winter drill program to further define this polymetallic discovery.

Meanwhile, the U.S. dollar steadied against a basket of global currencies, while gold prices edged higher on renewed risk aversion across the globe.

US Market Highlights

Over in the U.S., major stock indexes opened lower, with the market bracing for this week's inflation data. Tech giants are facing major legal hurdles, as Alphabet's Google lost its appeal against a $2.7 billion antitrust fine in the EU. Apple has also been ordered to pay $14.4 billion in back taxes to Ireland, a final ruling that cannot be appealed. In a separate blow, Apple's new iPhone launch was met with criticism in China for lacking competitive AI features, a factor that may further impact its market share against local rival Huawei.

In the aviation sector, Boeing has delayed ramping up production of its 737 MAX by six months, further complicating its goal to boost output amid supply chain constraints. Goldman Sachs also warned that its trading revenue would fall 10% this quarter due to slower activity in August, while Hewlett Packard Enterprise announced a $1.35 billion stock offering to fund its acquisition of Juniper Networks.

World Markets

Globally, the picture is mixed. European shares rose, supported by gains in the real estate sector, while Japan's Nikkei snapped a five-day losing streak. However, oil prices slid due to sluggish demand from China and oversupply concerns in the market. Elsewhere, Germany tightened border controls to curb irregular migration, and China posted its fastest export growth in nearly 18 months, though domestic demand remains sluggish.

In Europe, AngloGold Ashanti PLC (NYSE: AU) is making waves with its $2.5 billion acquisition of Centamin, further solidifying its operations in Africa. Meanwhile, Norway's Equinor has made a fresh oil discovery in the Norwegian Sea, signaling continued resilience in the energy market.

The markets continue to weigh global economic data, geopolitical concerns, and legal rulings, making it a dynamic day for investors across sectors.
