Frankfurt listing complements Nasdaq presence and advances the Company's North Atlantic Critical Metals Corridor strategy

September 25, 2026 (Source) — Greenland Mines Ltd ("Greenland Mines" or the "Company") (Nasdaq: GRML; FSE: HK6), a Greenland-focused mineral resource development company, today announced that its common shares are now listed and trading on the Frankfurt Stock Exchange ("FSE") under the symbol HK6. The listing provides European investors with an additional venue to access Greenland Mines shares and complements the Company's principal Nasdaq listing. No new shares are being issued in connection with the Frankfurt listing.

"Greenland Mines is building a transatlantic critical-minerals company, and Frankfurt is a natural next step," said Bo Møller Stensgaard, President of Greenland Mines Ltd. "Our projects sit at the intersection of Greenland, North America and Europe at a time when allied nations are increasingly focused on securing resilient, responsible sources of rare earths and critical metals. Nasdaq gives us a strong U.S. platform; Frankfurt expands our reach directly into Europe."

The listing also complements Greenland Mines' membership in the European Raw Materials Alliance (ERMA) and advances the Company's broader North Atlantic Critical Metals Corridor strategy, which is intended to connect Greenland's mineral resources with allied capital, infrastructure, processing pathways and industrial demand across North America and Europe. Greenland Mines is advancing Sarfartoq, its Southwest Greenland rare-earth project focused on neodymium and praseodymium, and Skaergaard, its East Greenland gold, palladium, platinum and critical-metals project.

“Greenland is becoming increasingly important to the economic and security interests of the United States and Europe,” Stensgaard added. “We believe Greenland Mines can be part of that solution—developing strategic resources in an allied jurisdiction and helping build more diversified critical-mineral supply chains on both sides of the Atlantic.”
