This transaction solidifies Safe Supply's strategic expansion into the harm reduction and medical technology sectors. The Company enhances their portfolio with proprietary fentanyl and xylazine detection test strips, along with drink spike detection technology, addressing critical public health and safety concerns.

With an established revenue pathway in California through drink spike test sales and a robust direct-to-consumer e-commerce strategy, Safe Supply is positioned for significant growth. The direct-to-retail distribution model further strengthens market penetration, ensuring widespread accessibility of these life-saving tools. This agreement marks a pivotal step in Safe Supply's mission to combat the fentanyl crisis while driving innovation in harm reduction technologies.

Geoff Benic, Chief Executive Officer of Safety Strips, commented, "Our transaction with Safe Supply marks an exciting new chapter for Safety Strips. By joining forces, we gain the opportunity to accelerate our growth and expand the reach of our innovative solutions. Together, we are well-positioned to make a meaningful impact in the safety and healthcare technology space."

As the fentanyl crisis continues to escalate, it has become a central issue in geopolitical tensions, with U.S. President Donald Trump vowing to impose strict trade measures on countries linked to illicit fentanyl production. The crisis has fueled a broader trade war narrative, with potential tariffs and sanctions targeting key supply chains. We are strategically positioned at the forefront of this fight, offering harm reduction solutions that align with growing regulatory and public policy efforts to curb opioid-related deaths. With governments prioritizing domestic production of harm reduction tools, Safety Strips strengthens our role in combating fentanyl-related harm while capitalizing on a shifting policy landscape that demands innovative, life-saving technologies.

Bill Panagiotakopoulos, Chief Executive Officer of Safe Supply, commented, *"This transaction represents a significant milestone in Safe Supply's mission to drive safety and healthcare technology. Safety Strips' innovative approach aligns perfectly with our vision for improving accessibility and quality of life through innovative solutions.
